Session 1A
Archives/Collections

The History and Contents of the Sholem Asch Collection of Judaica at the Yale University LibraryNanette Stahl

This paper will discuss the history of how the collection came to Yale and give a PowerPoint screening of some of the rare books and manuscripts contained in it.

German-Jewish Exiles in Los Angeles: Promoting the Legacy of Lion Feuchtwanger and Jewish Emigres at USC in the 21st CenturyMarje Schuetze-Coburn and Michaela Ullman

The Feuchtwanger Memorial Library (FML) at USC has a long history and documents the legacy of novelist Lion Feuchtwanger and other Jewish and German-speaking exiles in Los Angeles. The collection is not only heavily used by local and international researchers, but has also seen a steady increase in its use by students, thanks to newly developed instruction and outreach efforts. In the first part of the presentation, Marje Schuetze-Coburn will discuss Feuchtwanger's path into exile, shine light on this rich archival and rare book collection and cover the fate of his three libraries, including his final library now held at USC and Villa Aurora. Schuetze-Coburn will also discuss the FML's role to develop USC Libraries' strong focus on Exile Studies as well as Holocaust and Genocide Studies.

In the second part of the presentation, Michaela Ullmann will talk about the relevance of the collection for teaching and learning at USC. She will present case studies from a variety of classes she has worked with to document how she brings students into contact with these rich historical resources using hands-on active learning assignments and digital humanities projects. Finally, Ullmann will review a variety of outreach efforts that she and Schuetze-Coburn have conducted to actively engage USC's students and faculty with the FML and other Exile Studies-related collections at USC.

Poetic Expression in the Autobiographies of Jewish Youth Before the HolocaustMigle Anusauskaite

In 1932, 1934 and 1939, YIVO Institute for Jewish Research, at the time based in Vilnius, announced a series of competitions for Jews aged 16-22. The participants were asked to send in their autobiographies or diaries. Many of these, together with other books and documents, were plundered by Nazis and brought to Germany. After the war, they were given to YIVO Institute in New York. Some of them were translated and published.

Recently, among the documents that were hidden during the war and preserved in the National Library of Lithuania, around fifty additional diaries and autobiographies were found. Migle will address these items, among them, a diary of famous historiographer of Vilnius Leyzer Ran (1912-1995). While writing about their everyday lives, opinions and dreams, some of the young people include poems that they have themselves written. This poetry, though amateurish, is nevertheless a testament of the inner lives of these young people.

Lithuania

Lost and Found: Traces of Lithuanian Jewish Cultural DialogLara Lempert

In the middle of the 1930s in independent Lithuania, representatives of Lithuanian and Jewish intelligentsia and professionals began to develop mutual interest and initiated a number of common educational and cultural projects. This process was brutally terminated by the Holocaust, and its documentation and representations are rare and precious. This paper will present main tendencies of those intercultural contacts as they are seen through documents from Lithuania's depositories.

Abba Balosher's Library as a Model of Pre-War Lithuanian InstitutionsOlga Potap

In pre-World War II Kaunas, Abba Balosher (1869-1944), an intellectual and a scholar, managed a private library and distributed books in eight languages. He kept contacts with many book dealers and publishing houses overseas which make his library unique and expendable. The spirit of Balosher's library has matched the sense of the independent Lithuanian democratic society – intellectual and open-minded, not limited by languages and geographical borders.

Efforts were made to save Balosher's library during the Nazi occupation. More than 9,000 volumes were sent to the National Library of Lithuania. However, the most valuable Hebrew books and manuscripts were prepared for transport to Germany, while the rest of Yiddish and Hebrew books were burned or sent to the paper mill. Until last year, the librarians at the National Library of Lithuania and Balosher's relatives were confident that all Jewish books from Balosher's library were destroyed during the Nazi occupation. In 2017, the librarians at the National Library of Lithuania found a collection of Yiddish and Hebrew books in some storage facilities. The presentation will provide information about this finding and will also emphasize the attempts taken by the Lithuanian intellectuals to save the Jewish library.

Literary Offerings of Jewish Public Libraries in Interwar PolandMonika Biesaga

Nowadays, when many Jewish book collections and libraries from the interwar period no longer exist, printed catalogues are the only remaining sources which enable us to reconstruct their contents and make it possible to study reading preferences of their founders, owners and users. In her presentation, Monika will analyze the content of a few survived printed catalogues of Jewish public libraries in Poland and present the literary offer they had for a Jewish reader.

Vilnius: In Search of Traces of the Jerusalem of LithuaniaVadim Sapozhnikov

Mr. Sapozhnikov will discuss the complexities of translating a soon to be published English translation of a book that includes 23 pedestrian routes around the city of Vilnius and its suburbs tracing the often-tragic history of local Jewish community. These challenges are comparable to many of the issues librarians face when cataloging resources in multiple languages.

Some of the challenges faced in creating this translation were the multitude of sources in a variety of languages - old documents, governmental archives, photographs, advertisements, ticket stubs, lithographic prints and architectural drawings. Relatively recently declassified Soviet archive documents, as well as the sizeable portion of the book that deals with the Holocaust in excruciating detail, placed additional psychological demands and responsibility on the translator.

In addition, Vilnius has undergone several political changes throughout its history which often changed the official language. In order to be useful, it was important for this volume to strictly adhere to names used by the official language at a specific time in history.

Session 1C

New Israeli Literature in Translation

Lost (and Found) in Translation: New Israeli Literature in English

Rachel Kamin

It is an established fact in the literary world that Americans just aren't that motivated to read fiction in translation. Only three percent of all books published in the United States each year are in translation, but the small number of books being translated from Hebrew has been steadily increasing. Rachel will discuss some of these new books that are now available to those of us who are not quite fluent enough to read them in their original Hebrew, as well as trends in Israeli literature and books written in English by native Hebrew speakers.

Rachel and Yalta: New Perspectives on Talmudic Women

Tamar Duvdevani

Discussed during this talk will be two relatively new Israeli novels, portraying female Talmudic characters:

- Yochi Brandes's Ha-Pardes Shel Akiva (translated into English as: The Orchard)
- Ruhama Weiss's Yalta (currently in the process of being translated into English)

These books, written from the point of view of the female main characters, flesh out these Talmudic personalities, giving them a voice and a back story, adding depth to the Talmudic text. The books offer a new interpretation of Talmudic literature, focusing on the experiences of women and making them the heroes not only of their own story, but also of the Jewish people.

Session 1D

Youth Literature and Teaching

Teaching the Holocaust through the Arts

Leora Raikin

The purpose of the David Labkovski Project is to educate through the art of David Labkovski. By engaging viewers with his paintings and sketches, students learn lessons of life, survival, tolerance, acceptance, and the importance of bearing witness to history. Ms. Raikin will provide examples of how Holocaust materials, either those of David Labkovski, or items already in Judaica libraries, can be used to inspire middle and high school students to produce their own works of art or creative writing to then share with their local community or online.

Oy Vey and Excelsior! Jewish Representation and Moral Lessons in Graphic Novels and Comics

Eli Lieberman

This presentation will focus on graphic novels and comic books with characters who are identifiably Jewish. Mr. Lieberman will discuss how Haredi and other such groups utilize comic books and graphic novels to impart religious and moral lessons, as well as providing an alternative to secular comic books and culture. With the recent passing of Stan Lee, co-creator of many of the most well-known superheroes and superhero teams for Marvel Comics, there has been an increased focus on the history and use of graphic novels and comics in the general culture. Examples of Jewish characters in these materials include Shaloman by Al Weisner, as well as characters from the Marvel Comics universe who have markedly Jewish identities, such as Ben Grimm aka The Thing, Kitty Pryde aka Shadowcat, Magneto, and others. The benefits of collecting this genre, especially for adolescents, in Jewish school libraries will also be discussed.

Session 2A

Genealogy

Documenting the Vilna Ghetto Library

Judy Baston

Vilna – known as the Jerusalem of Lithuania – had a strong cultural tradition before the Shoah that flourished even after the Vilna Ghetto was established in 1941. One of the most important cultural institutions in the Ghetto was the Vilna Ghetto Library. In many ways, The Vilna Ghetto was unique – it was the only ghetto with a central, officially sanctioned library that functioned during the Shoah.

Documentation from the Vilna Ghetto Library has survived and includes lists of readers in the Library, lists of workers in the Library and even a list of readers who did not return books to the Library. Most of these lists are in the Lithuanian State Central Archive (LCVA) in Vilnius. One such list, “List of Readers with a Subscription to the Vilna Ghetto Library, Arranged in Alphabetical Order,” includes names and addresses of 4,401 Vilna Ghetto residents. This list is now publicly searchable by surname at <https://www.litvaksig.org/all-lithuania-database>.

Although none of the lists of Vilna Ghetto Library patrons appear to include the names of the particular books that specific patrons took out of the Library, several documents from Vilna Ghetto librarians provide insight into which kinds of books were preferred by which sorts of Ghetto patrons.

Genealogical Resources in Yeshiva University's Special Collection

Shuli Berger

This illustrated lecture will provide an overview of archival collections and manuscripts held by Yeshiva University Library's Special Collections relating to German, Hungarian and American genealogical primary research sources, dating primarily from the mid-eighteenth through the early twentieth centuries. The lecture will also include background information on the collections as well as specific examples of items in the collections. There will be a brief explanation of how to locate genealogical resources in the Yeshiva University's online catalog and archival finding aids.

Genealogical Research: In Memory There is Redemption" (Bi'Zikranot yesh ha-geulah) Bringing to Light Family Genealogical Research as a Redemptive Journey

David Levy

This genealogical research describes the methods and strategies to uncover past history of various members of the Gluskin family back thirteen generations and place this account in its historical context, as well as the importance of genealogical research. As well as the uncovering of an elite rabbinic history, this study brings to center stage from the margins material on matriarchal histories. The testimony is peppered with primary sources including interviews, photos, genealogical trees, letters, Hespasim, Hashkamot, pinkasim, maps, the historic Jewish press and current Israeli newspapers, memoirs, public records, oral histories, tombstone inscriptions, family photos, original poems by family members, and demographic studies. Many secondary sources such as Eleh Ezkarah, Minsk yizkor books, academic articles, etc. are drawn upon. The research notes some individuals who made major impacts in their Jewish community, Judaism, cultural history at large, Zionism and life in Israel for those fortunate to get out of the Soviet Union in Zionist Aliyah to Eretz Yisrael. We trace censorship and persecution under Communist Russia and how this affected family under the surveillance of the KGB. The work reveals the misirat nefesh of those who sacrificed as a form of Kiddush ha-Shem, in trying times. The work implores us to aspire to live by the light of the examples of these noble ancestors whose holy souls sparks shine as glistening "names" in Gan Eden. We cannot know where we are going unless we know "where we have walked" in generations before us. The book is an attempt to turn to the past to guide us into the future, to make us better persons, seeking wisdom from the elders, as parasha Hazinu enjoins:

שאל אביך וגדך, זקניך ויאמרו לך זכר ימות עולם, בינו שנות דר-ודר;

Session 2B

Jewish Music Research Across Archives and Libraries

From Mickey to Lowell: Creation of a Center for the Study and Preservation of Jewish Music

Sharon Benamou, Mark Kligman, Matthew Vest

In 2014, Dr. Mark Kligman was hired as the first Mickey Katz Endowed Chair in Jewish Music at UCLA. This has attracted students to UCLA as a center for Jewish music scholarship. The UCLA Herb Alpert School of Music received a gift to establish the Lowell Milken Fund for American Jewish Music in order to give attention to American Jewish music as an area of research and study. The UCLA Libraries are coordinating with the archive and across units to develop a shared collection development plan, programming and research.

Just Like a Dream: Finding Jennie Goldstein's Voice in the Archives

Amanda Seigel

With her distinctive voice and style, the Yiddish actress, singer, and lyricist Jennie Goldstein (1896-1961) performed, recorded and published dozens of songs during her nearly sixty-year career. Goldstein's musical output reflects the multiple roles she played, on and off-stage, and the changing cultural landscape of (Yiddish) America. What research methods can we use to discover musical (and other) sources from Goldstein's work?

The Struggle is Reel: Jewish Cassettes in the Recorded Sound Archive at Florida Atlantic University

Daniel Scheide

Home taping couldn't kill music when there were halakhic warnings on the insert. As audio cassettes are making a comeback, the Recorded Sound Archive at FAU is preserving and cataloging recordings found nowhere else, unearthing hidden gems not available in other formats. Orthodox pop parodies, Israeli pre-Eurovision Contest collections and cantorial rarities are among the highlights presented by Daniel Scheide in his inimitable style.

Session 2CLooking at International Youth Literature

Literature or Propaganda? How They Write About the Arab Israeli ConflictMarjorie Gann

Despite its complexity, the ongoing Arab-Israeli conflict is a surprisingly popular theme in contemporary children's fiction and fictionalized memoirs. This presentation will focus on books written in English by American, Canadian and British authors, as well as on translations from Hebrew and from bilingual Arabic-Hebrew picture books from Israel. It will examine this literature from both political and literary perspectives, comparing how authors from different interest groups present the history and lives of Jews and Arabs in Israel and the West Bank. Drawing on personal interviews with several authors, Marjorie will explore their goals in addressing this highly controversial topic in books for young readers. This paper will also examine the sources authors consulted or ignored in their research into the daily lives of the residents of Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza. Marjorie will situate this wave of political literature within a comparative context, comparing these books with classics of the American Civil Rights Movement. Finally, she will explore the literary quality of these highly political books. The discussion on the strengths and weaknesses of these novels should help school and synagogue librarians choose appropriate novels on the Middle East conflict for middle grade and high school students.

What's New in Award-Winning Translated Children's Books with Jewish ContentAnnette Goldsmith

At the 2012 AJL Conference, Annette identified and discussed children's books with significant Jewish content among winners of the two most important U.S. awards for translated books for youth, the Mildred L. Batchelder Award and the Outstanding International Books List. In the last few years there has been increased activity in publishing and promoting translations, including the appearance of the Global Literature in Libraries Initiative (GLLI), a group of translators, librarians, teachers, etc. that provides librarians with collection development information and programming ideas for world literature. In 2018, GLLI introduced a new award, the Translated YA Book Prize - another award to check for Jewish content. With the findings from her 2012 session as a point of departure, Annette will provide an update on the children's literature translation scene today, drawing on her dissertation research into decision making by children's book editors in choosing books from other countries to translate into English for the U.S. market. She will identify award-winning translations with significant Jewish content published from 2013-2018 and facilitate hands-on activities for using them.

Session 2DSSC Libraries

Managing the Synagogue LibrarySusan Kusel

Being a synagogue librarian can often mean wearing many hats: reference librarian, materials selector, OPAC manager, cataloger, volunteer coordinator and even shelver. Multiple synagogue librarians will talk about all these aspects of their jobs and how they manage their libraries. Other issues essential to synagogue library management will be discussed including processing book donations, selecting OPACs, and running book clubs and storytimes.

Using Synagogue and Library Archival Material for Outreach and Fundraising

Amalia Levi

Synagogues and libraries usually hold a wealth of archival material that can be promoted and used to enhance programming, education, outreach and fundraising activities. At the same time, considering budget and staff cuts in smaller institutions, it can also promote and emphasize the value of librarians and archivists for their boards and communities. This presentation will show you different practical ways to put your institution's archival collections to use, create community around them, and increase your institution's outreach capabilities. Learn of various methods and tools, available for free or low cost, to help you showcase your institution's collections and use them for public outreach. Such tools can vary in complexity from ones that require no, or very little, technical skills to more advanced digital sophistication.

Workshop Using "OMEKA" for Collection Digitization

Amalia Levi

Participants in this workshop will be introduced to Omeka, a free tool that allows individuals and institutions to build a content management system for their collections and display them on the web. Omeka is extensible and can be adapted to fit the needs of your institution. Participants in this workshop will have the chance to try out the tool and build a small exhibit. Requirements: Wi-fi enabled laptop. Bring your own digitized items or use the ones provided.

Session 3A

Shoah Foundation Archives and Data

Indexing and Searching Testimony in USC Shoah Foundation Visual History Archive

Sandra Joy Aguilar

In this hands-on demo, Sandra will show conference attendees the USC Shoah Foundation's Visual History Archive database which contains more than 50,000 testimonies of survivors of the Holocaust and other genocides. She will also demonstrate how the database is accessed by ProQuest subscribers at academic institutions worldwide and the special research features of that interface.

Spreadsheet Madness: Mapping Data from the USC Shoah Foundation Visual History Archive to MARC

Daryn Eller & Svetlana Ushakova

The 50,000-plus audiovisual testimonies in the USC Shoah Foundation Visual History Archive each have significant metadata, but it is organized in ways unique to the Institute and not compatible with Library of Congress standards. When tasked with creating library records for the archive, the challenge was to not only map the individualized data behind each testimony to MARC, but - since viewing each testimony for content would be impossible - to come up with uniform subject headings and summaries that could be used across experience groups. The presentation will take conference attendees through the process, familiarize them with the tools used, and explain how it was attempted to make the records less generic by adding geographical terms specific to each testimony. Also covered will be the additional challenge of getting the MARC records into USC's Primo/Alma catalog and the collaboration with USC librarians. Is it a good idea to create such generic records? Will it help researchers find useful resources or clutter up their searches?

Session 3BRemembering the Past and Preserving for the Future

---

Vienna University Library's Collection of Old Hebrew PrintsMonika Schreiber

Vienna University Library owns a collection of roughly 1,200 Old Hebrew prints, produced and circulated all over Europe over a period of more than 400 years, starting with the late fifteenth century. All of them have comprehensive bibliographic and item records in ALMA, which are in the process of being incorporated into "Footprints," a database on Jewish book history managed at Columbia University. Using showcase examples from the Vienna collection, this talk will address the subject of early modern academic collection building in the fields of Hebrew, the Bible and Judaism. The earlier Jewish and Christian repositories consolidated in the Vienna collection will be discussed in connection with questions concerning the work of Christian Hebraists who edited and authored books in Hebrew. The second part of the presentation will describe the digital processing of the ALMA records required for their inclusion into the "Footprints" database and the creation of a linked data graph designed to support research questions formulated using a digital humanities approach.

Dr. Lou Shub: A Pioneer Judaica Librarian in Sunny Southern CaliforniaHaim Gottschalk

Dr. Lou Shub was the first director of the library at the University of Judaism in Los Angeles, CA. He was also a pioneer in Judaica librarianship in Southern California. This presentation will present the life of Dr. Lou Shub and highlight his accomplishments in developing the collection at the University of Judaism (now American Jewish University) and his contributions to librarianship in general.

---

Session 3CLive Podcast

---

The Book of Life Live Show: "Boys and Girls or Monkeys and Racoons?"Heidi Rabinowitz and Joni Sussman

Podcast live shows are all the rage these days! In this session, join host Heidi Rabinowitz as she creates a podcast episode for The Book of Life before your very eyes. Guest Joni Sussman of Kar-Ben Publishing will discuss how publishers decide on an "art profile" for picture books - i.e. whether to use humans or animals, the ethnic diversity of the characters, any special needs portrayed, etc. Audience participation will be encouraged.

Since 2005, The Book of Life has been interviewing creators of Jewish books, music, film and websites. The Book of Life is closely affiliated with AJL. Many interviews take place during the annual conference, and the podcast has a tradition of offering exclusive interviews with the Sydney Taylor Book Award committee chair to reveal the winning titles. In this session, attendees will learn a little history about the show and record a live interview that will ultimately become an episode online.

Session 3D
Digital Resources Workshop

Choose Your Own Torah Adventure with Sefaria
Russel Neiss

Sefaria is deeply committed to the democratization of Jewish knowledge and helping individuals access Jewish resources in order to help promote Jewish literacy. The digitized texts and links are equally beloved by teachers and librarians in Jewish supplemental and day schools, and those engaged in text-centered Jewish digital humanities projects. In this hands-on session, participants will get a chance to play and explore Sefaria's core library along with some of its lesser known functions and features including visualizations, lexicons, contextualized topics, and other third party tools designed using API and texts. Participants will leave the session being proficient users of Sefaria and will emerge having begun the process of creating materials to use in their work.

---

Session 3E
Bonus Session

“Twitter Workshop”: Build Your Own Digital Humanities Twitter Bot {no coding experience required}
Russel Neiss and Michelle Chesner

You may have heard about those "twitter bots" that are to blame for sowing discord and false information during the 2016 election. They're small automated programs that usually spam users or scrape data from pages, and engage in other nefarious activities. But did you know that there are many creative bots that help contribute to the broader culture of the internet, digital humanities, and yes, even Jewish librarianship? Join us at this informal gathering with a link to your favorite digital Judaica collection, and leave (hopefully) having created a twitter bot that showcases it to the world.

Session 4A
Holocaust/Collections

Using Yad Vashem's Databases in Reconstructing Life Histories of Holocaust Victims
Lital Beer

Since its very beginning, Yad Vashem has been collecting documentation about the Holocaust from various sources and in a variety of topics, original or copy. A main goal has been the documentation and commemoration of the individual victims, "unto every person there is a name", as embodied in the Central Database of Shoah Victims' Names.

Recent years have brought about great technological advantages in giving access to the vast collections. Documents and photos have been cataloged, scanned and made available to the public through online databases. These different sources can be researched and assist in reconstructing individual life stories of victims. In this presentation, Lital will give examples of how different sources available at Yad Vashem can create a puzzle, from which a narrative of a person's story can emerge.

Zamlung: Acquisition, Outreach and Community Engagement in the Post-Survivor Era

Yedida Kanfer

In recent years, the responsibility for maintaining Holocaust collections has shifted from survivors themselves to the librarians and archivists who preserve their stories. As the post-survivor era draws near, how do we continue to maintain user interest in Holocaust collections? This session proposes that wider communities must have a stake in the collections that until now have been supported and donated by Holocaust survivors. Drawing from the most recent literature on community archives, this session explores the meaning of 'community' and the extent to which the concept has shifted over time. It argues that strategic 'zamlung' (what we might term 'acquisition') allows archivists to create invested communities that will sustain institutions and the collections within them. The JFCS Holocaust Center has focused its outreach on Jewish communities (eg. the children and grandchildren of Holocaust survivors, religious school students) as well as diverse, non-Jewish communities within the Bay Area. This session will end with hands-on examples of how the JFCS Holocaust Center has engaged its growing community via social media, web exhibits, and blog posts.

Cataloging and Digitization of the Archives of the Szeged (Hungary) Jewish Community: A Central European Case Study

Dora Pataricza and Kathy Glatter

Szeged is the third biggest city in Hungary and was a focal point of Neolog Judaism. The archive's spectrum contains official and private documents from a time span of two hundred years. In a two-year project, 82 linear feet of the Szeged Jewish Community are digitized and indexed. The archives contain the plans of the world-famous Szeged Synagogue (1907), paintings, and liturgical textiles. These are highly endangered and irreplaceable records that need to be preserved and made internationally researchable. Additionally, the Archive has created a large integrative database from historical and genealogical sites including the 1944 original Holocaust deportation list, plus 1,700 survivors who returned to Szeged in 1945-1946, sources from Yad Vashem, and the archival records. Electronic resources are used to locate maiden names of female Holocaust victims from their Hungarian marriage licenses. This innovative library project provides a comprehensive overview spanning decades recording the Szeged Jewish community.

Session 4B Digitization

Digitization of the Cummings Collection of Judaica and Hebraica at UCLA

Stephanie Geller

This presentation introduces the Cummings Collection of Judaica and Hebraica, part of the UCLA libraries, and the current project to digitize its particularly damaged and fragile volumes. The history of the collection, as well as some facts/figures about the collection and the digitization project will be discussed. The digitization decision tree and workflow will also be shared, followed by the decision to upload to the Hathi Trust and technical requirements for working with them. Finally, some of the difficulties of using OCR with Hebrew characters and on books with a number of conservation concerns will be shared.

Digitizing 140,000 Pages of Yiddish Linguistics: Strategies and Lessons Learned

Michelle Chesner

In 2016, the National Endowment for the Humanities granted Columbia University Libraries funding to digitize and make available c.140,000 pages of field notes from the Language and Culture Atlas of Ashkenazic Jewry. The two-year project involved extensive collaboration, both within and outside the university, and required new ideas and strategies for digitizing a large quantity of archival materials for patron use. This talk will discuss some of the strategies, challenges, and creative thinking and work that was required to take the idea into reality.

UCLA's Sephardic Archive Initiative: Community Engagement, University Libraries and Building a Digital Presence

Max Daniel

This presentation will provide an overview of the Sephardic Archive Initiative at UCLA, with an aim of introducing this project to a wider audience of Judaica librarians and exploring issues related to university, library and community relationships. It also seeks to provide insight into the unique challenges and opportunities around collecting and accessing Sephardic materials. Specifically, the presentation will cover a few main topics: the initiative's acquisitions, especially the archives of Los Angeles' Sephardic Temple Tifereth Israel; community engagement efforts including the March 2018 event, "Save the Data: Sephardic Antiques Roadshow" and an upcoming centennial commemoration of the community; and the building of a digital platform for the initiative.

Hands-On Resources of the JDC Archives for High School Librarians and Students

Linda Levi

The JDC Archives is an unparalleled repository of modern Jewish history. Its vast holdings document JDC's global humanitarian mission, activities, and partnerships from World War I to the present and are a unique window into Jewish communal relief, development, migration, and resettlement in the 20th and 21st centuries in over 90 countries. The JDC Archives is a treasure trove for those researching their Jewish family history and for students of Jewish history. The JDC Archives website (archives.jdc.org) includes a database for digitized collections, an interactive timeline, topic guides for educators, and a names index.

This presentation will highlight JDC Archives resources, with a focus on material of interest to high school librarians including:

- JDC Archives website and Our Stories feature
- JDC Archives Names Index and resources for family history projects
- How to access our historic Film Collection, including screening of a film clip
- JDC Archives Photo Collection
- Online exhibits
- Education resources on The Story of the St. Louis, Refuge in Shanghai, JDC and the Displaced Persons Camps, etc.

Scrutinizing Bias and Searching for Accuracy: Information Literacy Instruction Interventions for Jewish Studies Students

Lynn Lampert and Michele Paskow

Faculty from California State University Northridge (CSUN) will discuss the methods and assignments employed to teach a diverse group of undergraduate students to develop information literacy skills while gaining a basic understanding of Judaic and Jewish literacy through their enrollment in a popular general education Jewish Studies course. This presentation will discuss how students are introduced to critical thinking skills through library instruction interventions that assign them to locate and analyze authoritative and scholarly information in order to help them learn how to detect the bias and misinformation that often permeates online digital searches. Serving more than 3,500 Jewish undergraduates and 650 graduate students, CSUN currently has the 13th largest Jewish student population in the United States and the largest in the state of California.

The Holy Mysticat: Pairing Whimsy with Scholarship

Rachel Adler

Rabbi Rachel Adler PhD, Ellenson Professor of Jewish Religious Thought, Professor of Modern Jewish Thought at the HUC-JIR/Los Angeles, whose Engendering Judaism (1999) earned her the distinction of being the first female theologian to win the National Jewish Book Award in Jewish Thought, has a new book coming out. Tales of the Holy Mysticat (2019, Banot Press) began as a series of Facebook posts about Adler's cat, intended as a creative way to share additional teachings with her students outside of the classroom. These posts garnered a following. Maggie Anton offered to publish Tales of the Holy Mysticat with her independent press, Banot Books (the original publisher of Rashi's Daughters). Judaic books editor Rabbi Beth Lieberman is serving as editor on the project.

Rachel, Maggie, and Rabbi Lieberman will speak as a team about how this process unfolded – the author’s vision for teaching Jewish texts, thought, and theology; the editor’s techniques of pairing the author’s whimsy with her scholarship; and the publisher’s strategies for bringing this out into the world. It is worth noting, of course, that all three individuals share a love of cats.

Genizah Procedures at Mount Sinai Memorial Park

Howard Kaplan

This presentation will describe the genizah process after items arrive at the facility. Are the books buried in a specific section? Can patrons authorize the burial of books with their body before death? Can family members ask that books be buried with their loved ones?

From Guatemala to California via Brooklyn and Ann Arbor: The Life and Work of Sephardi Author Victor Perera (1934-2003) as Reflected in the University of Michigan Library Special Collections Research Center.

Gabriel Mordoch

A son of Sephardic parents from Jerusalem, the author, journalist and scholar Victor Haim Perera (1934-2003), was born in Guatemala City and moved to New York at the age of twelve. He graduated from Brooklyn College and subsequently received a master’s degree in English literature from the University of Michigan. After that, he moved to California to teach literature, writing and journalism at the University of California, Santa Cruz, and later at the Berkeley campus. Perera’s writings focused on Sephardic Jewry and on Latin America (particularly the Maya Indians). The goal of this presentation is to offer a glimpse into his works, personal library, interviews and other materials housed at the University of Michigan Library Special Collections Research Center.

Kehile-Kdoyshe ha-Malokhim: Gems from the Los Angeles Yiddish Community in the Yale University Library

Julie Cohen

Although Jews did not even arrive in Los Angeles until nearly two hundred years after they began to settle on the East Coast, by the mid-twentieth century, Jews of Los Angeles proudly asserted its position as the second largest and most important community in the country (Rotblat, 1955). In recent years scholars have begun to give attention to the history and the literary output of the growing community of Yiddish speaking Jews in the greater Los Angeles area. Yale is fortunate to own over seventy Yiddish works published in Los Angeles, mainly between 1925-1965. About a dozen date to the period of rapid expansion of the community in the 1920s and '30s. Of particular interest are three issues of satirical holiday gazettes, Der Grager and Dos Dreydl, from 1927 and 1928 that do not appear in any of the bibliographical databases. The presentation will highlight these rare sources and what they can tell us about the Jewish community of Los Angeles during this period.

Private Collections in Vilnius Jewish Public Library Zilvinas Beliauskas

Vilnius Jewish Public Library is in the process of structuring and presenting private libraries of distinguished book donators. In this way, not only VJP library's collection is being expanded, but the memory and character of some prominent personalities is saved and reflected.

This presentation will focus on three personalities who contributed to the collection.

Izrealis Lempertas (1925-2013) was a professor in Vilnius Pedagogical University and with the restoration of the Lithuanian Independence dedicated his scientific endeavors to the investigation of the Jewish and in particular Litvak culture and history.

Esfir Bramson-Alpernienė (1924 -2016) was a great cultural, social and literary activist, librarian, book collector, and the author of the famous "At the Treasury of Judaica" (2009).

Irena Veisaitė, (1918- ) is a Holocaust survivor and great humanist, specialist in theater, art, literature and humanities.

Discovering Jewish Lithuania Between Two World Wars: Manuscripts of Khayim Nakhman Shapira and Esther Eljasev

Julijana Leganovic

When Kaunas in 1919 became the centre of the regenerating Independent State of Lithuania, the Jewish Community of Kaunas took an active part in the building of the state. They have contributed to every aspect of Lithuanian life from literature and the arts, to science and politics. Recently among the documents that were hidden during the war and preserved in the National Library of Lithuania, a few dozen additional diaries, autobiographies and manuscripts were found. Among them were drafts and notes of a few prominent Jewish figures in interwar Lithuania including Khayim Nakhman Shapira and Esther Eljashev. These personalities undoubtedly contributed to the growth of Lithuanian culture and education. Working documents, notes and drafts are an interesting opportunity to look at the interwar Lithuanian life, personal problems and difficulties.

The Friedlandia Library: A Missed Opportunity for the Jewish People?

Dan Rabinowitz

By the end of the 19th century, the title of greatest library in Eastern Europe, in terms of size, rarities, of both books and manuscripts was that of Moses Areyeh Löeb Friedland (1826-1899). According to some, his collection was even ranked in the same class as that of the Bodleian. The library included three hundred volumes of manuscripts (including a few on parchment), thirty-two incunabula, and 10,000 volumes printed mostly in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The collection was created by proxy, through the efforts of the outstanding bibliographer Samuel Wiener (Samuil Eremeevich Viner, 1860-1929). In the early 1890s, Friedland began examining various Jewish institutions to which to donate his library. In 1892, however, Friedland rejected all of the Jewish options and instead donated his library to the Russian state, to the Asiatic Museum in St. Petersburg where it still resides.

Dan will discuss the history of the formation of the library, its path to the Asiatic museum and why it was not donated to a Jewish institution, some of its most important items and Wiener, one of the great bibliographers of the late 19th and early 20th centuries, whose catalog of the Friedland collection is still relied upon by scholars today.

A Newly-Discovered Document of Nineteenth-Century Orthodox Jewry: The Notebook of a Mohel in Baltimore and Beyond

Chaim Meiselman

During the course of cataloging work at Towson University, Chaim discovered a volume of Sod ha-Shem, a manual for a mohel (ritual circumciser) printed in Amsterdam in 1744. Appended to the leaves is a complete log of the mohel Noteh Grümbach's travels beginning in 1818 in Hesse and Bavaria and environs and continuing with his relocation to Baltimore in 1853. The historical record presented by the writing in this volume is wide-ranging and significant. This presentation will detail events in Grümbach's life and situate his work in the broader context of 19th century American history. Chaim will demonstrate Grümbach's extensive itineraries into states as far as Ohio and South Carolina via a map outlining dates and places of travel, and will discuss the effects of increased urbanization and the growth of railroads on his travels.

Persian Literature and Publishing

Persian Literature and Publishing

Gina Nahai, Ari Babaknia, Bijan Khalili

Dr. Ari Babaknia will speak about his four-volume book in Persian on the Holocaust and its impact on Iranian's awareness and sensitivity to this human tragedy, specifically on non-Jews. Bijan Khalili, publisher, bookseller and journalist, will speak about the publications of the Iranian Jewish community outside Iran in the last forty years. Gina Nahai will speak about the reasons why the 2,500-year history of Iranian Jews went largely unrecorded until they moved to the US, the process of collecting data, and the impact on the community on seeing their stories gathered and archived. Gina's work deals primarily with the history (both ancient and contemporary) of Iranian Jews, from their beginnings in what was then Babylon to their present here in the United States.

The Book of Psalms: Translations and TransformationsPaul Miller

The Hebrew book of Psalms (Tehillim) has been translated and transformed to become an integral part of Jewish and Christian worship throughout the centuries. This presentation explores the history of the use of Psalms in liturgy. It will be illustrated by examples of worship books from the collections of the Lowy-Winkler Family Rare Book Center. It will also include musical examples.

Early Tanach Printings in the Yeshiva University LibraryAvrom Shuchatowitz

In August 2018, Dr. Parviz Lalazari donated two volumes of early Tanach (Hebrew Bible) printings to the library of Yeshiva University. One was a volume from a Tanach printed in Venice in 1524 by Daniel Bomberg (1483-1553) and the other was a volume from an Amsterdam publication by Moses Frankfurter (1672-1762).

Beginning with just these two volumes, YU proceeded to locate other uncatalogued volumes so complete sets could be made. YU now has three Bomberg printings: 1524, 1546, and 1547. These Bible printings contain many early commentaries, as well as additional material on the Masorah, the traditional text of the Bible.

Also completed was a set of the 1724 Amsterdam printing. This one also contained a large compilation of early and later commentaries. There were multiple copies, each one from a different owner. One owner appended to the volume handwritten information and newspaper clippings about his family. Other owners were in Poland and England, each bearing their stamps and inscriptions.

Alpha Beta of ben SiraYoram Bitton

This year is the 500th anniversary of a publication of very unique and interesting book, Alpha Betah of Ben Sira. The book was published for the first time in Constantinople in 1519. It became very popular and was published many times in the 16th century. The book, which caused disagreement in the Middle Ages, is representative of what today we would call Pulp Fiction or low-quality literature. Yoram will discuss the importance of the book and more importantly, the social-historical context that caused this book to be published.

Anne Frank at 90: Why Is the Diary Not Enough Today?Menno Metselaar

In June 2019, Anne Frank would have been 90 years old. Anne and her family's hiding place, now a museum, is still one of the top attractions in Amsterdam today. At the same time, studies show that fifty percent of millennials in the United States don't know what Auschwitz was, and twenty percent can't tell you what the Holocaust was. As a result, Anne Frank House is producing literature and educational support materials to help young people make connections between the past and the present, to make what seems like distant history feel relevant to their lives and their current experiences. Speaking from his long-standing role as Project Manager at the Anne Frank House museum, Menno Metselaar will talk about using the familiar Anne Frank as the original source for new books, teaching materials, websites and exhibits that are being developed to help both adults and young people better understand the experience of anti-Semitism, as well as all forms of racism and injustice that they may experience in their lives or see playing out in the news and the world around them. This session will encourage discussion around collection development relevant to these topics, and the resources available to librarians who want to work with Anne Frank House. Menno will answer librarians' questions and exchange ideas in regards to exhibits, special projects and programming, and support materials for educators, libraries and schools.

A Sabbatical in Israel: Libraries, Bookstores and Non-Print Adventures

Rachel Leket-Mor

During her semester-long sabbatical in Israel, Rachel visited several archives and research, public, and special libraries, mostly for research and study purposes, but also just for fun. In this presentation, she will share her experiences as a library user in both famed and obscure, regional libraries where she made discoveries of all sorts.

Using Libraries as Jewish Art and Design Museums

Hillel Smith

Most library users are looking to find content. However, Hillel often uses Judaica collections superficially, examining how the books look and feel. By doing so, he can gain inspiration for his work as a visual artist, as well as develop a deeper understanding of how Jews throughout history have thought about their place in the cultures they inhabited. Paying close attention to aesthetics - including typography, illustration, and overall design - we can discover historic trends in taste and style. We can see evidence of interaction between Jews and non-Jews and view the interplay between assimilationist and isolationist tendencies. We can glean insight into the creators' political and religious affiliations and sympathies. And we can see the big questions of our day reflected in artifacts from the distant past. Particularly as we explore what it means to be Jewish now, in a globalized, humanistic society, finding precedent is empowering. How can we explore our collections in new ways? What else do they have to teach us?

---

It All Adds Up: Chronograms in Hebrew Books

Marlene Schiffman

Chronograms are often used as a dating method for classical Hebrew books. They are constructed from a phrase or biblical verse which yields a numerical value when the letters are added up. They are meant to yield a year, but often, also give another message. They often reveal the author's name, messianic hope, or a quotation from the Bible that is relevant to the topic of the book. The mathematics are not always so easy to compute: sometimes the cataloger has to count only certain letters, and sometimes s/he has to know which ones to subtract. We come across these every day in our cataloging, in both rare books and in recent publications. This paper will discuss the way in which chronograms are presented and how they can be useful to catalogers.

Cataloging Scrolls and Posters

Sheryl Stahl

Over the years, Sheryl had been letting the library's collection of Esther scrolls and posters sit around in the hopes that they would catalog themselves or that she would wake up one day with the ability to identify the provenance of each piece in these collections. Eventually she decided that it was better to catalog them poorly, than to have them on a shelf uncataloged. Sheryl will go over the minimal requirements for cataloging scrolls and her adventures in describing the posters.

Metadata Granularity, Historical Anachronism: Towards a Digital Reconstruction of Catalan Jewry

Neil Manel Frau-Cortes

This presentation is of two digital humanities projects aimed at reconstructing aspects of Catalano-Aragonese Jewish literature. The first one deals with the relation teacher-student among Catalan rabbis and the visualization of clusters and schools of thought. The second one aims at reconstructing the Majorcan and Catalan nusach through digital reunification of manuscripts and prints of prayer books. Both cases serve as a reflection on metadata granularity, including the inconvenience of grouping historical nations under anachronistic modern labels such as "Medieval Spain." Special attention will be paid to the use and edition of Wikidata as authority corpus.
